With a whole lot of caveats, it looks like the NY Times picked up that Hudson and Kingston led the way in change of net in migration from 2019 to 2020 in household shifts to primary residence as measured by where people get their mail. This data was provided by the US postal service, see chart below.

This month Pattern embarks on an in-depth piece of research on "who is moving in", as we attempt to move from anecdotal information to primary source data to assist the region in understanding population shifts that may have occurred as a result of the pandemic.

While the WEI ticked down it does show a fifth week of positive economic activity.

(Please note that PULSE will be released on Thursday not Friday)